

PARENTS HELPING PARENTS

In 1975, a group of parents came together because they wanted to understand what going to school would mean for their children with special needs. Prior to that, most of these children were not permitted to attend public school because of their disabilities.

Today, IN*SOURCE employs over 30 parents of children with disabilities. They provide information and support to families to help their children achieve educational success. For over 35 years, IN*SOURCE has helped parents understand special education, their rights and how to advocate for the needs of their children.

*"I struggled alone for many years before I contacted IN*SOURCE. At that point, I was at the end of my rope dealing with it all."

SOURCES OF SUPPORT

IN*SOURCE receives financial support through grants and contracts from the Indiana Department of Education and the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education Programs and private donations. IN*SOURCE is a private, not-for-profit organization and all financial contributions to assist these efforts are tax deductible.

ASSISTING FAMILIES THROUGHOUT INDIANA

IN*SOURCE assists families across Indiana. We have 22 regional offices in communities throughout the state. IN*SOURCE believes that parents working with other parents in the community where they live is the most effective way to help them become equal partners in the education of their children.
